100 Days In: Connecting Stakeholders to the Change We Need

Washington Entrepreneur Issues a Call to Action for Corporations, Entrepreneurs, Elected Officials, and the Community 100 Days into the Obama Administration

WASHINGTON, DC (April 23, 2009) Washington, DC entrepreneur, Kesi Stribling, CEO & Chief Strategist of KSG Strategic Consulting, has issued a call to action for 100 DAYS IN: Connecting Stakeholders to the Change We Need. 100 DAYS IN, founded by Stribling, is a movement whose mission is two-fold: to take the pulse of President Barack Obama's administration 100 days into the term, and connect stakeholders to the change we need as relates to corporations, entrepreneurship, community issues, healthcare, education, the economy, and the government. "President Obama has asked citizens to remain involved and connected beyond the election and inauguration. We are calling on all stakeholders, including elected officials, from all political parties and areas of interest, to join our initiative," Stribling noted.

The 100 DAYS IN Call to Action will begin with a literal call - a nationwide teleconference, which will take place 7:00 p.m. - 8:30 p.m. EST on May 1, 2009 and will draw participation by an expected 500 business owners, corporate executives, national and local community leaders, elected officials, and economists. Led by Stribling and with input by these key leaders and business experts, this call will explain the goals and objectives of the 100 Days In movement, and will highlight the participation of some of its major sponsors and partners: Carl E. Brown, Jr., Minority Business Development Advocate; Daniel Moss, Vice President of Business Development, HBCU Connect; Victoria V. Negrete, CEO of Impacto and Founder, Latino Economic Summit; B. Andrea Okwesa, Policy Analyst for the Washington, DC Field Office of the U. S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission; Sophia A. Nelson, Esq., Editor-in-Chief, Political Intersection blog and Founder of iask, inc.; and, Jennifer P. Streaks, Esq., financial and securities attorney, and contributor to U.S. News and World Report.

It will also highlight details about the first event for 100 DAYS IN: a panel discussion which will take place soon after the Call to Action. Dubbed Connecting Stakeholders to the Change We Need: A Blueprint for Businesses, Entrepreneurs and Community Leaders, the discussion will feature the nation's leaders in business, entrepreneurship, the economy and the community and will provide a forum for dialogue on the Obama administration's progress and challenges to date.

"Our primary goal is to bring these stakeholders together for a real-deal dialogue and call to action that identifies exactly how we can have our concerns heard and work proactively with our government, said Stribling." She also noted that proceedings and recommendations from the Call to Action and future panel discussions will be shared with key administration leaders for consideration and potential action.

Advance registration for the FREE nationwide conference call is required. Register at www.100daysin.com, email jointhemovement@100daysin.com, or call (202) 904-1380.
